Questions to Consider

1. How does journalist John Reed characterize soldiers' experiences during the war? What things do readers need to keep in mind in analyzing his accounts?

2. What roles did women play during the revolution? How did ideas about women's roles shape their experiences? Provide specific examples from the text.

3.. As historians, what kinds of historical questions about the Mexican Revolution can we ask using these kinds of primary sources as evidence? For what kinds of questions will they not provide sufficient information? What is gained, and what is lost when using these sources?
